Your risk profile

Your results

This report indicates your scores on four aspects of psychological functioning that determine the degree by which you may tend to take risks, namely:

- Rule orientation
- Safety orientation
- Achievement orientation
- Emotional orientation

The scores as indicated below show the degree to which the characteristic described will influence your behaviour. Please note that your scores are relative to the norm group used. As more diverse profiles become available, re-norming will take place. Such re-norming exercises may affect your scores, but are unlikely to have a significant impact.

Please note that you may score equally high / low on seemingly opposite subdimensions of the same category. For example, you may achieve high scores on both "Follows rules" as well as "Breaks rules". This can be understood in terms of the complexity of psychological functioning; behavioural adaptability and therefore the possibility that you may apply yourself differently in various contexts.

Rule orientation

Construct	Definition	Score
Follows rules	The degree to which you follow rules and common standards of behaviour. High scores also indicate that you are likely to put in effort into being reliable, prepared, punctual, precise and organised.	1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10
Breaks rules	The degree to which you are willing to break common rules, possibly take shortcuts, not be bound by regulations. High scores also indicate that you are willing to tolerate chaos and open situations and may prefer novelty and approach it in an open and flexible manner.	1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10

Construct	Definition	Score
Cautious	The degree to which your behaviour reflects security needs, such as possible fears or anxieties, distrusts and doubts, the prevention of personal, health and financial risks, and the careful avoidance of threats.	1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10
Reckless	The degree to which your behaviour reflects a need for challenge, risk-taking, openness to potential dangers, courage and abandon.	1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10

Achievement orientation

Construct	Definition	Score
Competitive	The degree to which you pursue ambitious goals in an energetic, diligent and focused manner. High scores also indicate commitment, enthusiasm and a willingness to adapt and learn where necessary.	1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10
Laidback	The degree to which your behaviour reflects an unconcerned and carefree approach that may border being unproductive. High scores are also associated with a lack of urgency, lack of focus and not being competitive.	1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10

Construct	Definition	Score
Stable	The possible degree of confidence in your own abilities and emotional resistance to negative events. High scores can also indicate emotional maturity, friendliness, consistency and a calm approach.	<table border="1"><tr><td>1</td><td>2</td><td>3</td><td>4</td><td>5</td><td>6</td><td>7</td><td>8</td><td>9</td><td>10</td></tr></table>	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10
